Too Much Paternalism.

Under the caption "Not a Luxury, but a Necessity" The Kentucky Farmer and Breeder, of Lexington, replies at length to a very brief criticism of THE OUTLOOK in regard to a State appropriation in aid of the State Fair. The article of the Farmer and Breeder is reproduced in this issue.

THE OUTLOOK has no specific hostility to State aid to the State Fair.
Doubtless the State spends many a dollar in a worse cause. What is objected to is the general tendency toward paternalism in government.
The appropriation for the State Fair is paternalism pure and simple. The State is called on to help in an enterprise that the managers ought to make self-supporting. If it is the necessity that is claimed to be the interests most directly concerned should subscribe an amount sufficient to make it a success. Paternalistic precedents in other States don't justify it here.
Federal and State paternalism are growing at a rapid rate. More and more people every year look to government to do for them what they ought to do and can do for themselves.
The more this demand is indulged the more it hurries the nation toward state socialism.

No doubt a State Fair permanently located at Lexington, with suitable grounds and buildings would be highly beneficial to the live stock and agricultural interests. The county fairs serve in a measure the same useful purpose.
None of them asks help from the public treasury. In fact, if they can't justify their existence by merchandising and gaining popular support, as indicated by the gate receipts, they are generally felt that it is better for them to perish. Some have been abandoned, but it is principally because the management has failed to keep step with progress by providing novel features of general interest. There was too much sameness and general character of tame-ness about the old-fashioned county fair from year to year. The instant jump into popular favor of the street fair some years demonstrated the public relish for novelty. The street fair was promoted by private subscription. We have heard of no instance in which a county fair or a street fair has been aided by money from a county or municipal treasury, but if it was the custom to do so we believe it would be a harmful policy in the long run. The money taken from the people by taxation should as a rule be expended for the prime essentials of good government economically administered. Education at public expense is one of the exceptions. It would be a daring person who would now criticize the policy of educating the children at public expense.
Other sorts of paternalism seem to justify themselves by results, but to dip into the public treasury for every sort of enterprise that may help the public welfare is carrying the practice too far, especially when it can be as well or better done by private effort.

JUDGE PAYNTER, of the Court of Appeals, decides that national banks can not secure the exemption from taxation of their capital stock invested in United States bonds, as it would result in the evasion of taxation by national banks, an effect not intended by State or Federal government, although the latter exempts U. S. bonds themselves and interest on them from all taxation. It is said that the whole Court will doubtless concur in the decision on appeal.

The peril attending life on board a warship even in time of peace is again illustrated by the frightful casualties resulting from the explosion of a boiler on the U. S. gun-boat Bennington at the harbor of San Diego, Cal., last Friday. About sixty men were killed and fifty wounded. Accidents on Uncle Sam's warships are rather frequent, but investigation fails to disclose criminal negligence.

A couple of Hungarians went hunting for Abdul Hamid, Sultan of Turkey, at Constantinople, last Friday. They failed on the Sultan, but bagged 24 soldiers and innocent bystanders, besides wounding 67 persons and 55 horses. The killing of rulers is a fascinating sport with a certain element in all countries.

Common sense is not only very uncommon now-a-days, but seems to be rather unpopular.

What the world needs most now is a good supply of old-fashioned honesty.

The standard is now being raised and the time is here when the people must either stand for honesty or line up with political grafters.

We see several more national banks have suspended and the de-positors are left holding the bag.
Best banking system in the world for the bankers.

Of course the people are taxed

The many friends here of L. T.
Sharp were sorry to hear of his sudden death at Hillsboro last week.
He had been traveling this road for many years for a Mayville firm, and knew most everybody in this community. He was a clever, sociable man, and his aim was to take care of his customers as well as his house.

Peace to his ashes.

As well as you haven't had a snake story for some time we will give you one a little mixed with snake and squirrel, a little old, but new to many. About two years ago Jas.
Kerns while hunting in John A.
Anderson's woods saw a young squirrel on the tip end of a limb of a tree. On close inspection he saw a very large snake, which afterwards measured 94 feet in length, crawling out the same limb. Jim first shot the snake, the shot cutting the snake nearly in two some 2 feet back from the head, one shot striking the head. The snake came tumbling to the ground and the little squirrel got home safely in the tree. On approaching the snake it was seen to be all puffed out between the head and the wound in the body. Jim says he pressed on the puffed place with his foot and two more young squirrels ran out at the wound and one ran out at its mouth. The three squirrels went capering up the tree and in home with their little mate, and perhaps tried to tell him of the discomfort of their imprisonment. The snake had swallowed four of them, but the fourth one was dead—perhaps the first one he swallowed. The whole den would soon have been cleaned up had not Jim appeared. Five-sixths squirrel and one sixth snake makes this belong to the squirrel class of stories.
